

VERIFICATION DECISION

- The verification decision was done by a logical approach and collaborative team effort. The verification decision is the story we constructed in the process of verifying the logic itself. If we change the story, our approach changes as well. By presenting two different cases, we were able to minimize our possibility of error. Although we constructed a visual and logical approach to verify the context of our stories, our test data was done in person at each physical world. One can continue to test the courier record, but an in person physical test can be one of the best ways to test. This collaborative discussion led to us to discover that Orra Quill is not a bounty hunter, but rather a spaceship. The story continues in the way we decide it should. In this case, we found Orra Quill on the first planet. What my team and I did not know, is that we walked into a trap. After flying off with Orra Quill from the first planet back to base, we had no idea that we had just become the universe's most targeted individuals.
